

Kingston Marriage Register

[Our early Dutch were required to have their banns published three times previous to marriage. This requirement was legally enforced after the English conquest of the New Netherlands in 1664, and was continued until the Revolution. This publication of banns, however, was not necessary when parties received a marriage license from the Governor of the Province. In this Marriage Register there are many entries of the publication of banns where there is no accompanying record of a subsequent marriage. This may be because, for various reasons, the marriages were not solemnized, or, as is more probable in the great majority of cases, because the parties, after the publication of their banns, received a certificate to that effect, upon the presentation of which, with satisfactory explanations, to a minister of another place, they could be legally married. These facts will explain the frequent use of the words "Date of marriage not given," prefixed by the editor to many of the entries.

The letters "j. m." and "j. d.," added respectively to the names of husbands and wives, are the initials of the Dutch words for "young man" and "young daughter," and mean, not necessarily that the contracting parties were "young," but that they had never before been married.]

fluence of the Delaware and Neversink rivers, and was burned and pillaged by Brandt and his followers. There is a township in Orange Co. named Minisink, organized in 1780, which originally comprised a large extent of territory extending to the New Jersey line, and which in 1790 contained 2,215 inhabitants. It now covers less than one-third of its former area. The "Minisink Patent," granted by the Crown in 1704, covered a considerable portion of the Minisink country, but was so general and indefinite as to its boundaries that for a long time it proved a very disturbing element among the inhabitants of that patent and the numerous others granted about the same time. Domine Mancius doubtless applied the name of Minisink indiscriminately to every portion of the Minisink region.
